BOSTON, April 19.

The following anecdote was handed to us by a gentleman who was on board one of the French ships, during the action of the 16th ult. A gifnadier of the soisson nois regiment having had one of his legs broke, and almost tore to pieces by a cannon ball, took out his knife, cut away the remaining flesh, and thr. w the leg overboard, and setting down went on loading his musket, and with great composure said, "To read graces a Dien, il me resis encore deux main et un jambe pour fervie man rei—I thank God I have two hands and one leg lest to serve my king with."

April 26. Private letters from Europe, of good authority, mention, that the king of Pruffia had proceeded far in, if not actually completed, a negociation in favour of the teveral contracting powers of the armed neutrality, and for the protection of their territorial dominions in case they should be threatened upon account of any step taken by these powers in the congress of neutrality.

Extrad of a letter from an efficer of infor-mation in the jouthern army to his friend in this city, dated Camp, before Camden, May 1, 1781.

"After lord Cornwallis's retreat from Deep river, the impracticability of overtaking and bringing him to action, as well as the impossibility of feeding our army on the same rout, appeared evident. General Greene, sensible it would answer no good purpose to remain upon Cape-Fear river, pushed his operations into this state with a view of drawing his lord-ship to succour his posts in this country. The time of service of the Virginia militia expiring at that period, we were left too weak to storm or completely invest Camden. The general detached lieutenant-colonel Lee's legion and part of the second Maryland regiment to affist general Marian in the reduction of some of their lesser posts. Fort Watson has already surrendered; upwards of 100 prisoners were taken, and we may expect some other partial advantages; but Camden having a garrison very little inferior to our present force, our expectations of reducing it cannot be very languine. On the 25th instant, lord kawden very gallantly sallied upon our lines, and was successful. We were obliged to retire about five miles, with having upwards of 100 men killed and wounded. The opportunity was what we ardently wished for, and at one moment promised us victory and the town; but the next clouded the bright prospect; a part of the first Maryland regiment (which were advancing) got into some disorder; colonel Gunby ordered the whole to retire, he says to take another position; the second Maryland regiment, influenced by the movements of the first, also retired. The first Virginia regiment falling back at this critical instant, the second had orders to retreat, and the whole body of infantry abandoned the field, leaving the enemy to recover from a consusion which the spirited behaviour of our cavalry and light infantry and the well directed fire from men killed and wounded.
